Abstract

This study aims to throw the light upon a phenomenon that has a real existence in all the language levels: phonetically, morpho- logically, and grammatically.

Its existence under the rhetoric section permits a doubt about the purpose and the work of this phenomenon.

We've hardworking to describe the relations between the linguistic assimilation and the rhetoric Assimilation.

So, the introduction had to restrict the subject limits and to define it. After, the first chapter includes four topics, where each one deals with a side of the language aspects and studied in the assimilation.

In the second chapter, the way of the research skipped to the rhetoric phase of the subject where its four topics dealt with the notion of assimilation at the rhetorical researcher's community, depicted as an art of good style. However the first topic insinuated to the execution validity of the rhetorical definition of the assimilation on a lingual themes.

In the second topic, the research joined between terms that were separated and proved the relations between them.

The research described and clarified the parts and the types of the assimilation in the third topic, and tried to reveal its place in science of rhetoric.

An application of the study in the verses of the Holy Koran is depicted in the third chapter.

The research comes to a point that the Arabic language themes -if their spot diverged- are correlated and analogous as if they branch from one origin. The establishment that the assimilation is the analogy between the things whatever their fields differ was confirmed.

The study is in introduction and three chapters. The introduction limits the article then determines it.

The first one is search the assimilation in the Arabic language.

The ascend one search in the rhetoric aspect to our subject. In definition, terminology, and kinds of the assimilation.

The last chapter is a study practice in the Koran.

Finally our study obtained that the Arabic language aspects are correlative, it is the assimilation how proved that. However the assimilation is to look like tow things deferent or not.
