

International powers adhere nuclear agreement with Iran despite Trump threats

Major countries including U.S. allies said that it will adhere the nuclear agreement with Iran which the American President Donald Trump threatened to tear it apart. Trump said on Friday that he will refuse to admit that Iran abided by the agreement signed in 2015, describing the Iranian regime as an extremist, he also declared that he'll (refer the matter) to the Congress and consult the U.S allies about how to amend it. The U.S., France and Germany said that the nuclear agreement serves our Joint national security interest, the European Union said that one country couldn't put an end to an effective agreement.
