

Beliefs and Development (Magic, Myth, Folk Medicine)

Beliefs in things are ancient legacies inherited by generations, and often are the product of the environment in which human lives and impact, and interfere with the cultural and social factor.

Strangely enough, many people put their important life things on these beliefs, and there are those who do not take a step in the work if they come up with something, so they are beliefs among generations.

Some studies reveal that popular beliefs, especially magic, are less influenced by change and less responsive to modernization, despite the material changes in culture, which indicate the depth of these beliefs and their penetration into the psyche of society. During socialization.
