

Socialization and its impact on development

Socialization is the attention to social systems that transform man - that organic matter - into a social individual capable of interacting and integrating seamlessly with members of society. A process whereby children gain the moral judgment and self-control necessary to become responsible adult members of their community. Socialization according to the social concept is only to train individuals in their future roles to be active members of society and teach them the social values, customs, traditions and customs prevailing in the society to achieve harmony among individuals and between social norms and laws, thus creating a kind of solidarity and cohesion in society.

It is a process of learning, education and education, based on social interaction and aims to provide the individual with appropriate behavior, standards and trends for certain social roles, enabling him to cope with his social group and social cohesion with them.

Many parties contribute to the process of social upbringing such as family, school, mosque, comrades and others.
